

PHYSICAL THERAPIST

DR JOELLYN FOX

Joellyn Fox is a Lehigh University graduate with dual degree in biology and psychology and a graduate of Temple University's Doctorate in Physical Therapy program who now resides in Philadelphia, PA. Joellyn has been a licensed Physical therapist for 22 years with 18 years of specialty in the treatment of individuals with Parkinson's disease at the Dan Aaron Parkinson's Rehabilitation Center which is part of the University of Pennsylvania Health System. Joellyn has been an adjunct professor at Widener University, Drexel University and Rutgers University as well as a frequent speaker at local Parkinson's disease support groups in both Pennsylvania and New Jersey. Joellyn is a board member for the MSA Coalition's NJ Branch. She has been a keynote speaker at conferences hosted by Penn's Movement Disorder Clinic, Penn Neurosurgery, Mainline Health, CurePSP and Good Shepherd Penn Partners. Joellyn was also on the teaching faculty for the Parkinson's Foundation and has lectured at both the national and international level. Currently Joellyn is the Site manager of an outpatient therapy clinic at Good Shepherd Penn Partners at Penn Medicine in Philadelphia.